SIMPLICITY TO MARK COOLIDGE'S FUNERAL SERVICE

Former President Will Be Buried Tomorrow In Homeland Soil

WHOLE NATION MOURNS

Body Will Rest by Those of His Father, Mother and Son

By David P. Sentner
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Jan. 6—The everlasting silence of death today closed around Calvin Coolidge, the quiet one, while the nation mourned his loss.

The former President will be buried tomorrow in the homeland soil of Plymouth, Vt., hallowed by his Puritan ancestors.

Even as he lived, simplicity will mark the funeral services to be held here tomorrow at the Congregational Church where he worshipped each Sunday.

Then the funeral cortege will wind over 100 miles of New England hills to the Coolidge family graveyard, where the former nation's chief will be laid to rest beside his father, mother and young son.

Townsmen, statesmen, friends from near and afar, today filed past the unpretentious bier of the man who worked much, said little and served his country long and well.

Within the Coolidge house of mourning, with the peaceful Berkshire Hills for a back drop, Mrs. Grace Goodhue Coolidge, the widow, controlled her sorrow. She had suffered a nervous prostration shortly after her famous husband had been fatally stricken from a sudden heart attack. But she was reported recovered and bearing up bravely.

John Coolidge, only living son of the ex-President, and his wife, the former Florence Trumbull, kept close to Mrs. Coolidge.

The only other surviving relative of the late President is an aunt, Sarah Pollard, of Proctorsville, Vt. She is almost 100 years old and was not expected to attend the funeral services here.

The services will be held at 10.30 a. m., tomorrow at the Edwards Congregational Church, founded by the noted Colonial minister, Jonathan Edwards.

The Rev. Albert J. Penner, new pastor of the church, will officiate.

The Coolidge family Bible, which the late President read nightly, will be used in the services.

The favorite Coolidge psalm, "The Lord is My Shepherd," will be included in the funeral ceremony.

Details of the sudden death of Mr. Coolidge were divulged today by Harry Ross, his confidential secretary, one of the last to see him alive.

"Mr. Coolidge had breakfast yesterday with Mrs. Coolidge," Ross told International News Service. "She said she planned to do some shopping in town. He asked her: 'Don't you want to take the car, dear?'

"She replied: 'No, it's too nice a day. I'm going to walk.'

"Mr. Coolidge was driven by his chauffeur, John Bukoski, to his law office at 8.30 a. m., he gave some dictation to Mrs. Ruth Hanner and seemed in the best of spirits. He completed his work without complaining of ill-health. I rode back with him to his home at 10 a. m. and chatted in the library until 10.30 with him."

"Mr. Coolidge talked of his future plans.

"He said: 'In the future, I'm going to spend as much time as I can in Plymouth.'"

Coolidge never forgot the modest Vermont farm house where he learned of the good earth and the virtue of early rising and retiring.

He attended Amherst and hung his lawyer's shingle in this town eight miles away. He courted and married the vivacious Grace Goodhue, teaching at a deaf and dumb institution nearby. (They were married in the old Edwards Congregational Church) he served in local, state and national office, to become known as the iron man of Massachusetts politics.

COUNTY TAXPAYERS DISCUSS PROBLEMS

J. Howard Cliff Commends County Officials For Management

DISCUSS TAX EQUALITY

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 6.—Three hundred Bucks county taxpayers from various sections of the county Wednesday night attended a meeting of the recently-organized Bucks County Taxpayers' Civic Association in the Court House for the purpose of urging the reduction of the tax burden and to take steps to recommend the reduction of governmental costs, as well as to further projects for civic improvement.

Henry Arnold Todd, of Doylestown township, president of the new association, introduced J. Howard Cliff, of Ivyland, who outlined the purposes of the organization and called attention to the fact that he has always found that the Bucks County Commissioners and Bucks county's representatives in Harrisburg have been most willing to assist, serve and co-operate with the taxpayers on any reasonable request. He also made it plain that the association in no way was a political body.

Benjamin Kirson, of Buckingham, secretary of the association, read the constitution and by-laws recently adopted. The meeting place of the association is to be Doylestown. The constitution sets forth that the association points to a system of working in close co-operation with township, county and borough civic associations and to act as a clearing house for information of value to its members.

Representing the Bucks County Commissioners, County Solicitor Mark Thatcher, of Perkasie, brought the greetings of that body to the members of the new association.

"We feel we should not take part in your organization, other than as an interested observer or a co-operator. We believe that the best stand to take for we would not want any impression to get out that the Commissioners are in any way influencing a body of this kind.

"Tonight I want to bring you greetings from the Commissioners and to tell you further that if you have any requests to make to them or if you desire any information, they will be very willing to serve you.

"As for information regarding the receipts and expenditures in Bucks county, the auditors are busily engaged in preparing the county statement, so that it would be a difficult task to get it now. That information will be available as soon as the auditors are completed with their work and the statement will be made public throughout the county.

"As to improvements that have been made in the county in the past year and at any other time, I can say that all projects have been recommended by the various grand juries of our county and are a matter of record.

"As to preparing the budget for the coming year, I can say that the Commissioners are contemplating the expenditure of no money except that which is necessary.

Mr. Thatcher urged the members of the association, in their deliberations, to remember certain things.

"First, I want to state that the county tax rate composes a very small portion of your tax burden. Bucks county also compares very favorably with other counties in the state in tax rate.

"I would also call your attention to the fact that Bucks county has no control over 70 per cent of the expenditures, for they are expenditures controlled by acts of the Legislature. The other 30 per cent is made up of necessary expenditures for maintenance of our county plant."

Mr. Thatcher also advised the new association, that before they proceed with anything, they should be absolutely sure that their foundation facts are true. He also urged them to make their communications in writing to the County Commissioners so that there will be an accurate record.

Prof. Fred Weaver, of the department of agricultural economics, State College, addressed the taxpayers on taxation. He informed those present that the State College department that he represents will be glad to compile the necessary figures for the association after the submission of Bucks county audits for certain years, for the purpose of comparison. The findings, from such a study, Prof. Weaver said, may give the association some definite project on which to work.

Beautiful Coolidge Home in Northampton

Here is the pretty home of the Coolidge family, "The Beeches," at Northampton, Mass., where the former President of the United States spent most of his time after he had relinquished the reins of government. It was here Mr. Coolidge did his journalistic work, and here, too, that he passed away, during a heart attack with a suddeness that shocked the entire nation.

Y. M. A. FIVE CROWNED FIRST HALF CHAMPIONS

Quintet Wins 7th Straight Contest; Hibernians Victims

SCORE IS 43 TO 27

(By T. M. Juno)

The Young Men's Association basketball five was crowned champions of the first half of the Bristol Basketball League in the Italian Mutual Aid Hall last night as the quintet won its seventh straight contest. The Hibernians were the victims last night, the score being 43-27.

The game was played before a record-breaking crowd of over three hundred spectators who used up every inch of space available to see the fray, which marked the closing of the first half of the circuit.

Failure to stop "Dates" Fegely and "Reds" Bailey atoned for the Hibs' defeat. These two boys scored thirty-two of the winners' forty-three points and were open to shoot all night. Fegely scored six field goals and seven fouls in nine tries to count nineteen points while Bailey scored six times from the floor and once from the foul mark to give him thirteen points.

The other of the sharp-shooters of the Y. M. A. team, "Toby" Lawrence was blanked from the floor although he was credited with two foul shots. It was the first time that Lawrence was shut-out from the floor this season and it took close guarding on the part of "Marty" Fallon to do the trick.

The "Hiboes" played loose basketball and missed many shots. They were really off last night and simple shots under the baskest which would have been made easily any other night were missed time after time. The only time the Big Green was in the game was during the third quarter when a rally scored eight points in two minutes and brought the score to 23-20.

The Y's soon tightened up and had easy sailing throughout the remainder of the game. Seventeen points were scored by the winners in the last quarter.

"Al" Bauer played a wonderful defensive game and was the cog in the passing offense of the winners which netted field goal after field goal.

"Mikie" Downs and "Gige" Dougherty were the losers' best with twelve and ten points respectively.

The line-ups:

Y. M. A.	Fd. G.	Fl. G.	Pts.
Lawrence f	0	2	2

TROLLEY LINE IS BEING ABANDONED; DISMANTLE ROAD

Wires, Poles and Rails to Be Removed Wherever Feasible

REAL ESTATE NOT SOLD

Tracks Through Here Are Likely to Remain for Some Time

The Trenton, Bristol and Philadelphia Railway Company operating from Torresdale to Trenton, N. J., has been definitely discontinued and the poles, wires and portions of the trackage are being scrapped. Work of dismantling the road is now in progress.

All property of the company, with the exception of the real estate, was recently sold and as much of the road will be dismantled as is possible at this time, according to an announcement made at the offices of the company here today.

"The rails which are in paving will not be removed at this time," according to M. J. Hill, manager of the company. "Neither will the iron poles on Mill and Radcliffe streets," stated Mr. Hill. There is an agreement between the trolley company and the Philadelphia Electric Company for the use of these poles on these two thoroughfares by the latter company.

With the dismantling of the Trenton, Bristol and Philadelphia Railway Company there is but one remaining trolley company operating in Bucks County. This is the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railway Company which operates the lines from Yardley to Trenton, and from Morrisville to Trenton.

The Trenton, Bristol and Philadelphia Railway Company was organized and began the work of constructing the line from Torresdale to Croydon in 1894. The upper end of the line was built in 1903.

The inauguration of this line was marked by a number of legal clashes between the T. B. and P. Company, and opposing interests. The right of way obtained for the trolley company was bitterly contested by the opposing faction and numerous obstacles placed in the path of the proposed line. The privilege of a right of way over P. R. R. Company's ground in the vicinity of the Croydon passenger station, was denied and for a long time passengers were transferred over this ground in horse-drawn coaches. Then there was difficulty encountered in obtaining a crossing privilege over the tracks of the P. R. R. at Mill street. This was finally overcome however and a continuous line was established from Torresdale to Morrisville. Later the privilege of operating the T. B. and P. cars over the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Company's tracks from Morrisville to Trenton was obtained, and thus entrance was gained to the New Jersey capital city.

The same interests which are the controlling factors in the Trenton, Bristol and Philadelphia Railway Company recently organized the Delaware River Coach Company, and now operate buses from Trenton to Torresdale.

Exchange Club Speaker Talks About Enzymes

Dr. J. J. Willaman, chemist employed by Rohm & Haas, gave the Exchange Club, at its meeting last evening, a most interesting and instructive lecture on "Enzymes."

The subject, although fascinating, is so little understood by the average person that any attempt to repeat the many statements made by the speaker would be ridiculous.

"Enzymes," he said, were an organism that possessed the power to change one thing into another. In the chemical reaction which results, the "enzymes," however do not appear, and yet it seems that their very presence exerts an influence which is the direct cause of the reaction.

"Enzymes" have never been seen by the eye of man, but their presence is known.

"Enzymes" exist in the throat, the stomach and the intestines, and aid in the process of digestion.

The speaker said he was particularly interested in "Enzymes" from the standpoint of industrial chemistry. "Enzymes," he stated, were used in the textile industry in the tanning of hides and also the manufacture of cheese, etc. By experiments he was able to show the power possessed by these minute organisms. His address was greatly appreciated by the members of the club.

GEOLOGICAL MYSTERY

Atlantic City is sinking into the Atlantic Ocean at the rate of six and one-half inches a century. Boston is sinking at the faster rate of eleven and one-half inches. Resting on solid rock, New York City is sinking at the rate of five inches. Coney Island's sinking feeling is more pronounced than that of all the rest, while Philadelphia's is least, but the latter city is far inland.

Erosive action of the waves upon the coast may account for these sinking shores, but how is one to reconcile that with the fact that Portland, Me., is lifting itself out of the ocean at the rate of seven inches every hundred years, and Charleston, S. C., at the rate of 15 inches? And Boston has had her rising spells as well as her sinking spells.

Here is one of the unsolved geological mysteries. Of course the geologists have their theories, but they do not agree and conclusive proof is lacking.

Earthquakes on the ocean floor or in distant countries may be the explanation for these shiftings. Or they may be things going on under the earth's crust of which the geologists know nothing.

For centuries to come there is nothing to worry about, unless the scientists wish to worry about their inability to solve the mystery of this inconstant and inconsistent coastline.

AUTO MAGIC

"I don't own a car"—the admission has a guilty ring, so guilty that it must be accompanied by explanations or defenses in this year 1933 when the average retail price of an automobile is probably less than $750. And what a car it is! It can stand examination with a critical eye—surely it seems as if the mechanical road millennium has dawned.

The sighs of those who bemoan the passing of old craftsmanship—of what avail are they in the face of this miracle wrought by automatic machines and mass production? Not for $10,000 could the old artisans have produced this graceful, efficient and comfortable vehicle costing less on an average than $800.

For these reasons the 1933 automobile shows will assume an extraordinary economic importance. The new cars meet the requirements of a diminished national income and still come up to the higher standards set by the car-buying public. They conform to changed conditions.

Four or five years ago the poorest car could find enough buyers to net its makers a profit. Today the market is smaller and knows good auto flesh. Every automobile show will exhibit nothing but thoroughbreds this year.

Tact is merely the art of murmuring soft words of consolation to the other fellow's vanity.

Manchuria now has its own national stamps—including a rubber stamp called the ruler.

You can say one thing for bandits. When they clean out a bank they don't blame it on world conditions.

Europe's attitude toward America isn't new. Back in Aesop's time a man saved a snake and it bit him.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

It was on the Monday morning that the boy Jabez brought a message to "The Crooked Billet." Mr. Ragg, sitting at the receipt of custom, tortoise-shell glasses on nose, eyed Jabez over the top of the "Wannington Clarion."

"Well, my lad?"

Jabez was blessed with a surly sense of independence. His bow legs and his big round head gave him the look of a bulldog.

"Well, my man?"

Mr. Ragg rustled his newspaper, and stared austerely over the tops of his glasses.

"No cheek in here, please. What d'you want?"

"Anyone of the name of Wolfe live 'ere?"

"Mr. Wolfe is residing in my 'ouse."

"Well, 'e's wanted."

"Who by?"

"Old Crabbe, and 'e's to come sharp."

Mr. Ragg laid his paper on the bar counter, and eyed Jabez with austere simplicity.

"Don't know the gentleman. Old who?"

"Crabbe."

"Don't know him."

"Josh Crabbe."

Mr. Ragg shook a solemn head.

"Mr. Josiah Crabbe."

"Why, there now, you should have said that before! But there—cut along, now. I'll see Mr. Wolfe has the message."

Nor did he smile till Jabez had left the bar.

"Funny; old Josh likes them like that! Can't abide an oily tongue! Well, here's something for him to bite on. Pair of nut-crackers! Get old Turrell's head into 'em! Boiled duck, but I should like to see it!"

He laid paper and spectacles down on the counter, got off his stool, and went with his slippers flip-flapping on the stones of the passage that led into the garden. An arbour, green benches, and white tables, and a small bowling-green were shut in by high red-brick walls. At one of the tables sat Wolfe, the bowl of a clap pipe visible over one shoulder, a book propped up before him on an upturned mug. Mr. Ragg looked at him with a kind of affectionate gravity.

"Sorry to disturb you, sir."

"Hallo!"

"Mr. Crabbe's just sent a message, sir. He wants you to oblige him by going to see him at once."

"Mr. Josiah Crabbe?"

"The same, sir."

"Is he ill?"

"Can't tell you, sir. Mr. Crabbe and you, sir, ought to be very good friends—if I'm taking no liberty."

Wolfe sat very straight, his chin turned towards one shoulder.

"Bit of a character, isn't he?"

Mr. Ragg rubbed his lower jaw.

"One word, sir."

"What is it?"

"He don't like jelly bags, nor oily tongues. You ain't that sort, though, sir. Just you spank it into him. Show him your forearm—aye, and a bit of your boot."

Wolfe laughed.

"That's the line, is it?"

"Let him think you're afraid of him, and he'll be at you like a nippy dog."

Josiah Crabbe's house was very much his castle, with its high walls set with glass, its massive stone gate-posts, and its iron gates. These gates were always kept locked, and Adam Grinch opened them to Wolfe when he had pulled the bell-chain that hung down one of the stone pillars. Grinch showed a grim courtesy to the few people whom he happened to like. He and Wolfe had never exchanged three words, but the gardener had often had a look at Wolfe, and knew pretty well what manner of man he was.

"Morning, sir. Mr. Crabbe's expecting you."

"I had his message."

Grinch closed the gates with a faint clang.

"No need to go to the door, sir. You can get straight in by one of the long windows. There's Mr. Crabbe's orders."

Grinch thrust in a brown forearm, and held back a green curtain.

"Dr. Wolfe, sir."

"Show him in."

Adam Grinch dropped the curtain behind him.

Josiah Crabbe was sitting in a cane-backed arm-chair between the round table and the fireplace. A red handkerchief covered his knees, and on the table within reach lay a little leather-bound book, a brass inkstand, and a long clay pipe. His black trousers were drawn up, so that the tops of a pair of white socks showed.

"Good morning. Come in."

"Good morning, sir."

Wolfe laid his hat on the round table. The little black-coated figure in the chair, with the red handkerchief spread like an apron, gave Wolfe an impression of surprising quietude and watchfulness. It did not move a finger or blink an eyelid. The only things that seemed alive were the two black eyes in the vellum-coloured face. They were like two points of light in the shadowy interior of the room.

"Sit down, Mr. Wolfe. So I hear you are leaving Navestock."

"It is not quite decided yet."

"I know Navestock very well, sir. I have known Dr. Threadgold for twenty years or more. No; I can't say that he has ever been inside this house."

Wolfe took one of the elm chairs that were ranged along the wall. Being a man who had been trained to observe other people, he was quick to notice it when he was studied in turn. Josiah Crabbe's eyes were the eyes of a swift and keen observer. In manner he was abrupt, and quaintly familiar, a man who could not tolerate formalities and affections.

"You need not look me over, Mr. Wolfe."

"No?"

"I didn't send for you for the tongue-and-pulse business. Not for to-day, at any rate. I am a hard old party, hard as a nut. Though," and his eyes gave a queer twinkle, "I am disposed to be a little rheumatic now and again. Liver, too, a little sluggish, sometimes; but I'm hard—I'm hard."

Wolfe sat squarely, his eyes fixed on Josiah Crabbe's face.

"You look fairly tough, sir."

"A game bird, Mr. Wolfe."

"I would give you your fourscore and ten, barring accidents."

"What's my age now?"

"I should put it at seventy-three."

"Someone blabbed it, did they?"

"No."

"You are on the nail—square."

He nodded his head and looked pleased. His eyes gave his wrinkled face an expression of alertness and vivacity. The thumb and forefinger of his right hand went into his waistcoat pocket, and drew out the little gold snuff-box.

"Inquisitive man? Very fairly!"

"Some of us have to be inquisitive."

"Doesn't make one popular. Know why I sent for you?"

"Not in the least."

"The genteel people want you out of Navestock, eh?"

"You may put it in that way."

"And the town is a dirt heap?"

"Much of it."

"Except my property?"

"Except Peachy Hill."

Josiah Crabbe took snuff, sneezed at his leisure, and buried his face in his red handkerchief. His little black eyes gleamed out suddenly at Wolfe from behind the red bandana.

"Peachy Hill may be as bad as the rest."

"No, sir."

"Supposing I swear that it is."

"I shall have to contradict you."

"Got facts?"

"A fair quantity."

"Pretty conclusive, eh? Make you hold your nose! Turrell and company won't look at 'em, or smell 'em. I know, I know."

Josiah Crabbe spread the red handkerchief over his knees. He was very deliberate, smoothing it over and over. The wrinkles became more marked about his eyes and mouth.

"Well, Mr. Wolfe, well?"

"Well, sir?"

"A darned hypocritical world!"

"Parts of it."

"Love your neighbours, eh, and poison 'em with your drains! Peace and goodwill, and all that. Confounded nonsense! What the devil is Navestock to you?"

"Something—and nothing."

"They want to be rid of you. I know 'em. The pompous, upstanding, church-going scoundrels. What did I say—scoundrels? I meant the gentry, sir, the landowners, the petti-foggers."

He sat up straight in his chair, his hands twisting the red handkerchief. His voice became sharp and biting, but retained its noiselessness.

"Most men want to be loved, clapped on the back, slobbered over in the papers. Goodwill, eh—love your neighbour, pity for the widows and orphans! What rot! Learn first to be hated, hated, I say, and feared. Then you build on something solid."

Wolfe leaned his elbows on his knees, with body bent slightly forward, his chin resting on his fists.

"You are right there, sir. There is something solid about hatred."

"It's bed-rock—bed-rock. Popularity—sand and slush. Get on the rock; clamp yourself down on it. They can't wash you off, they can't shake you, they can't make you squirm."

"That takes time."

"It took me twenty years."

"And money."

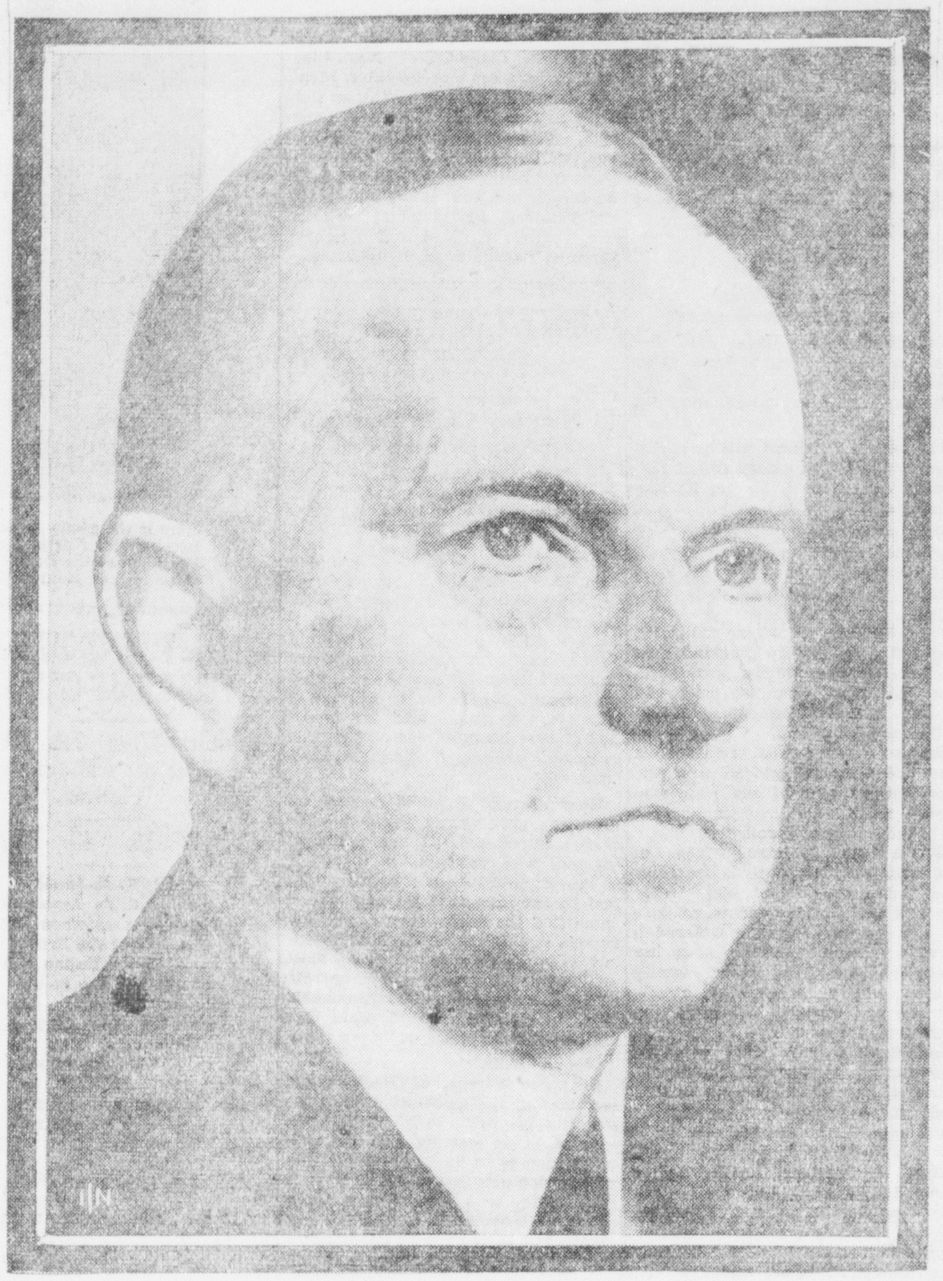

The little man's eyes shone in his hard, flat face.

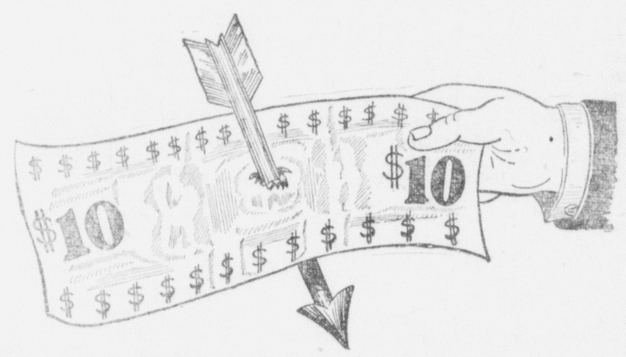

"Money—that's it. Get money. Hurt the beasts. Don't talk slush to 'em; damage their pockets. That's where an Englishman's heart lies. Get a grip on it, squeeze it, see 'em snarl and crumple up. I'm here, I'm on the rock. They are afraid of me, all these Turrells and Wilkses and Crumps and Johnsons, and the little peddling humbugs who cheat across their counters. They have been trying to drag me down for thirty years. Pooh! I'm solid. I have got solid stuff under me, money, property, fear. Don't talk about popularity. Sham stuff, mere pudding. I'm a bit of granite, sir. They can't bring up anything against me. I have been a straighter man than any of them—and they know it. Look at Peachy Hill! What's that but a knob of granite in the thick of a half-drained bog!"

County Taxpayers Discuss Problems

Prof. Weaver said that the "farmer is inequitably burdened by taxation, more so than numerous other occupations and professions."

Equalization of that burden, and a general lowering of all government costs was advocated by Weaver as a means of assisting a cure for present taxation ills. He said that it would be first necessry to ascertain how much can be done in lowering the costs of government, and then to find out what can be done in equally dividing the cost.

"Agriculture, for instance," he said, "must pay 38 per cent. of its income for taxes compared to 8 per cent. paid by the construction industry. Those are the two extremes, but agriculture pays at least again as much as any other industry for taxation."

Mr. Weaver suggested that a more equitable arrangement in road maintenance would be to have it all paid for from the income from automobiles.

Relief in maintaining rural schools should come through larger state aid.

Webster Achey, Doylestown attorney, praised the association and its aims and cautioned the members not to attempt to "sweep away over night practices of years" in their efforts to bring about some measure of relief. He especially urged that taxes can best be reduced by cutting expenses.

SPORTS

HAWKS OUTPLAYED BY THIRD WARD, 11 POINTS

The Third Ward A. C. closed their first half with a one-sided 43-32 victory over the last place Hawks. The win put the Pikers in a triple tie with the Aces and the Hibernians for second place in the league standing.

The Warders were themselves last night and hit the cords from all angles of the court. Seventeen times the sphere was sent through the net from the floor and nine times from the foul line.

The Hawkers put up a waging battle until the last quarter when they became lost and enabled the Pikers to pull away from them. Up until that fatal period, the Hawks ran neck and neck and did not allow the ultimate winners to edge more than a five point lead.

"Ed" Dugan and Harry Kendig again led the assault of the winners with fourteen and twelve points, respectively. McGinley played well on the defensive part of the fray besides hitting the net for three field goals.

For the losers, "Gil" Wright was high scorer with ten points. "Henny" Morgan, high scoring ace of the Hawks, was bottled from the floor up until the last two minutes of playing when he registered a long shot.

The Third Ward plays the Y. M. A. Monday night in the opening of the second half. In the other fray, the Aces will play the Knights of Columbus.

SPORT SHOTS

By MAXWELL J. GORDON

WE WERE looking over the sports stories in our files for the year 1932 and found some very interesting facts concerning the activities of local teams and players. . . . In tennis we found that Nelson Green, Penn State sophomore, and son of Doron Green, president of School Board, is the champion singles player of the borough, and his friend and partner, "Herb" Lawrence, former Pennsylvania star, shares the doubles championship with young Green. . . .

Harvey Walters, of the Paterson Parchment Paper Company, is the champion quoit player . . . . and that the Bristol Bowling Club, with Yeagle, Hirsh, Kelly, Steel and Allen, won the bowling honors for the last year. . . .

Edgely won the championship in the Twilight League . . . while P. Piazza, of the same team, won the batting championship with an average of .360. . . . The Hibernians won the team batting honors with a .263 average in the same league. . . .

In the lower Bucks County baseball league the A. O. H. team and Hulmeville, winners of each half, could not get together for the play-off.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Maddox, Maple Beach, had as New Year's Day guests Miss Ruby Veit and Grantley Maddox, Wilmington, Del.

SHARPEST

No package contains genuine "BLUE BLADES" unless it carries the portrait of King C. Gillette.

● The "BLUE BLADE" is without question the sharpest blade we have ever manufactured. This fact is proved by an ingenious device—Gillette's exclusive photo-electric sharpness tester.

The Tobacco Crop may be Short this Year—

but that can't affect Chesterfield—why?

Production of tobaccos usable for cigarettes or "roll your own."

U. S. crop (average, 5 years, 1927-31)	1,091,265,750 lbs.
U. S. crop (Govt. estimate, 1932)	751,601,000 lbs.
Estimated shortage, 1932 crop	339,664,750 lbs.

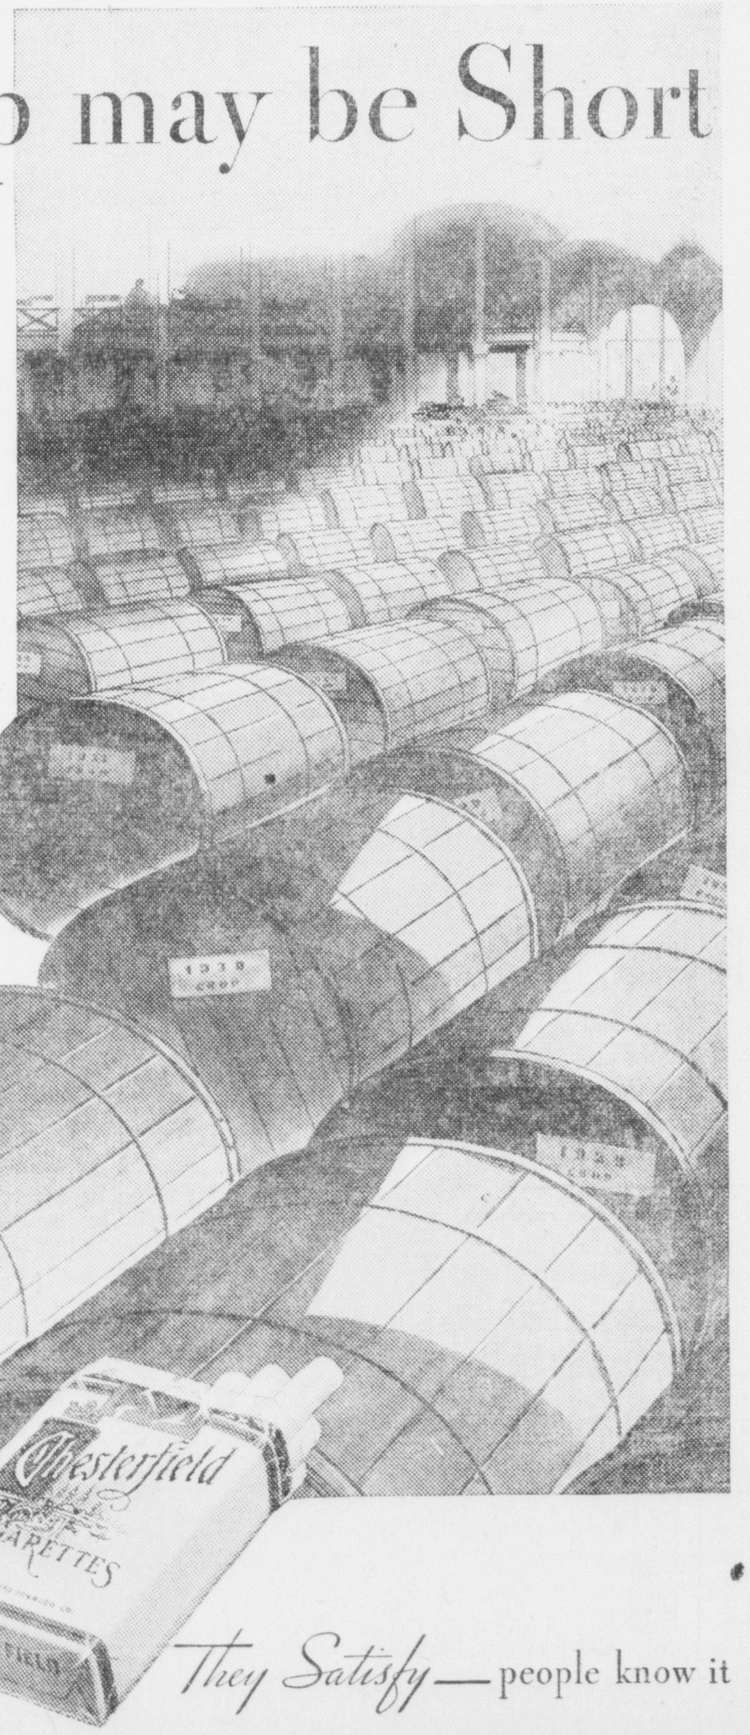

The manufacturer of good cigarettes does not depend on any one year's crop. He knows that to keep up the quality of his brand, he has to carry on hand at all times a large stock of the right kinds of tobacco from several years' crops.

The domestic tobaccos are kept in large hogsheads, each containing about 1000 pounds, and are allowed to age for two full years—in other words, nature's method of curing the tobaccos. Something like ageing wine.

Liggett & Myers has about four and a half miles of warehouses used for storing leaf tobacco, to make sure that its products are uniform and are as good as can be made.

To do this requires a great deal of money—for example, there is invested in the domestic and Turkish tobaccos for Chesterfield Cigarettes over $75,000,000.

Smokers can be assured, regardless of the crop conditions, that Chesterfield will be absolutely uniform—the same yesterday, today, at all times. The cigarette that's milder—the cigarette that tastes better!
